Hannah and her Seven Songs

All is desolate and dark. To me there's no light

Since they took from the world my treasures so bright.

My children! My children! Beats yet my heart

When all of its strings are thus riven apart?

Yet for Israel's God this suff'ring I bear,

And would bear a greater, if greater there were.

All is desolate and dark. To me there's no light
Since they took from the world my treasure so bright.

Hannah and her Seven Sons

Oh ! how the whole scene is burned into my brain !

I see the vile Syrians with faces like Cain

Rush over my threshold and ruthlessly seize

All my seven fair sons, while I on my knees

With tears and implorings beseech them to wait ;

—Hope whispers that time might avert their sad fate ;

I knew 'twas but yester the old scribe
they slew,

The old Eleazar to Israel so true,—

Hannah and her Seven Sons

On my knees I implore them to wait but a day ;

They mock at my pleading ; then drag us away

And cast us in prison ; but leave us not long ;

The Bigot his triumph will show to the throng.

With wickedest pleasure he calls for the first

Of my beautiful boys, the one that I nursed

In the flush of my youth when Judea was free ;

On my knees I implore them to wait but a day.

Hannah and her Seven Sons

—Oh God! keep his heart firmly true unto Thee.—

Ha! The king commands homage to him and his gods.

He looks up to Heaven, nor falter his words:

“God forbid that homage to thee I should show;

Israel's God is my God! To none else will I bow.”

They lead him to death, my first born!
my pride!

And now tear my second fair boy from my side

Hannah and her Seven Sons

And place him in front of the conqueror's throne :

—Thou wilt not, my son, thy religion disown.—

His answer is ready ; he quick makes reply :

“My brother bowed not, and no more will I !”

“Why not ?” asks the tyrant. “Because,” says my boy,

And his face glows resplendent with heavenly joy,

“Our second commandment tells all,—even thee,

No other gods shalt thou have before me.”

“ God forbid that homage to thee I should show ; Israel’s God is my God ! To none else will I bow.”

Hannah and her Seven Sons

Death follows his brave words. My third boy they take;
—Be still, my wild heart—not yet must thou break.—

My third one! My hero! How princely his port!

“No other God shalt thou worship! is taught

In my pure religion; more gladly I meet

The fate of my brothers than bow at thy feet.”

These proud words the death-blow as guerdon receive.

——“More gladly I meet
The fate of my brothers than bow at thy feet.”

Hannah and her Seven Sons

My fourth boy they take; will the tyrant achieve

Any conquest over his soft, gentle heart?

—Fear not, my sweet son! Bear bravely thy part!—

Yes! he too is faithful! He utters
these words:

“He that sacrificeth to all other gods Save the Lord only, shall be wholly destroyed.”

Alas! he too is slain! how widens the void

In my sore-stricken heart. Ha! now my fifth lad

Hannah and her Seven Sons

They drag to the tyrant, who, already mad,

Becomes doubly enraged at these words of my son :

“Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God,
He is One!”

With this watch-word of faith he yields his young life.

Now they come for my sixth. His spirit is rife

With scorn and contempt for the despot's vain power ;

Nor scourges nor threats will cause him to cower.

Hannah and her Seven Sons

“Why so obstinate?” asks the tyrant, more mild.

—Waver not, my dear son, thou’rt Judea’s true child!—

“Think’st thou I’m affrighted? My God is still here;

He is mighty and terrible! Him only
I fear;

And thou too wilt one day acknowledge His might,

And suffer that thus thou hast usurped
His right.”

They take him to death in his fresh, joyous youth,

—now my fifth lad
They drag to the tyrant.

Hannah and her Seven Sons

That thus he pronounces the stern words of truth.

What horror is this? My youngest ye'll take?

My baby? My darling? Oh! for the sake

Of the mother who bore you, spare me this son!

My six have ye murdered! Will ye leave me not one?

They heed not my pleading, but drag
him away;

Oh, Father of Heaven! Is this but one day?

—Oh ! for the sake
Of the mother who bore you, spare me this son !

Hannah and her Seven Sons

But see! The base, murd'rer speaks kindly to him.

—My sweet precious child, do nothing to dim

The lustre that shines from thy six brothers gone;

Be true to thy God e'en though thou'rt undone.—

Now the king hands him treasure, and tells him to live,

And promises all, if allegiance he'll give.

See! Now does he cast his ring on the ground,

Now shows him his dead brothers lying around

“Think’st thou that I fear thy threats?” says my boy.

Hannah and her Seven Sons

And tells him their fate will be his if he dare

Refuse to stoop for it.—Still lies the ring there!

“Think’st thou that I fear thy threats?”
says my boy;

“Our God is the great King of Kings!
Then why

Should I give allegiance to other than He?”

“If thy God is so great why saves He not thee

From my power?” asks the king.

“Because,” he replies,

Hannah and her Seven Sons

And in his young face a grandeur doth rise,

“I am not worthy redemption from thee

And thou art not worthy God’s greatness to see.”

“Slay the lad like his brothers!” the tyrant commands.

Oh ! Cruel king, ere thou steepest thy hands

In the blood of my little one, let me be slain.

I cannot endure this mountain of pain.

“Nay, thy own laws forbid,” the tyrant doth say ;

Hannah and her Seven Sons

“Sheep nor cow with its young shalt thou kill in one day.”

Oh! woe to thee, murd’rer, our laws to pervert!

The God of our race will inflict thy desert.

Come, my sweet angel! My lamb!
Ere we part,

Come kiss thy poor mother! Come nearer my heart!

—Oh courage!—My dear one, tell Abraham there,

My sacrifice hath his much exceeded;
where

'Tis for God's glory ; His will be done !

Hannah and her Seven Sons

He built one altar I have built seven !

He offered one Isaac ; all mine have I given !

A little longer ! A little longer ! Farewell, my son !

'Tis for God's glory ; His will be done !

There ! There are my children, my dear treasures, all !

They see me. And now they beckon and call

Yes ! Yes ! My Beloved ! I'm coming ! I come !

Hannah and her Seven Sons

To come join them there in that beautiful place.

Yes! Yes! My Beloved! quick, quick will I trace

My steps to our house-top, and thou canst reach there

And with thy strong arms draw me up through the air.

We'll cheat the mad tyrant, and dwell in our home.

Yes! Yes! My Beloved! I'm
coming! I come!
